Dear Will

I was sitting on the porch this morning reading when the postman brought me a very formidable looking registered letter addressed in your well known hand I opened it wondering what it could mean and still more surprised to find an envelope addressed to you, containing Aunt;

letter to me, it evidently missed the right envelop of course I was greatly relieved that nothing dreadful had happened and Anne would explain it all when I next heard from her

I had such a nice letter from Elizabeth a few days ago with the good news that Mother is very much better and I hope she will soon be her old self again, I was awfully concerned about her, now

I hope you have found some good person to take her place in the house until her health is fully restored. I fear you have lost Elizabeth as she told me in her letter she had already resolved her time. She certainly has found a treasure at this time.

I am feeling pretty well and we are ready to go to home but this trouble with the Rail Roads is detaining us until things are more settled. George was not not long ago that he expected to go to Aucata the 7th August he probably is there you all seem to be prospering. I will write Beatrice when he leaves for Bully Angus can write no more now send love to every body

Your affectionate mother
